Machine learning is a branch of artificial intelligence that enables systems to learn from data.

It improves performance automatically through experience without being explicitly programmed.

Common applications include image recognition, speech processing, and recommendation systems.

Algorithms such as decision trees, neural networks, and clustering are widely used in machine learning.